“Leveraging The Holidays for Job Search Success”

As the holiday season arrives, many job seekers make a bad decision to lessen or shut their job search all together- with the thought they'll renew and resume their search in the new year. I advise my clients that to do this is a bad decision! Why? A misunderstanding of how hiring happens – as the job market doesn't take the holidays off and neither should you.

There is a perception that hiring managers push off hiring until January. This is wrong because employers feel increased pressure to fill open slots before the end of the year. If the job is available, whether it's the holiday season or not, it must be filled. Individuals who wait or think that those jobs might be available, after the first of the year, might miss a golden opportunity.

The end of the year brings use-them-or-lose-them deadlines with many employers. Hiring managers are often faced with the fact, if they don't fill open positions before the new year, they risk losing the open slots. Hence the reason why the first weeks of December are often some of the best times to be active in the job market, strong year or not.

Join George Schonewolf, President/Career Coach at Career Directions & Founder/Facilitator of the Career Networking Group, Montgomery County on Tuesday, November 30th from 10:00AM to Noon for this stirring, thought-provoking, and motivational session.

Attend this presentation and you will learn:

- How to leverage the holiday period to your advantage.
- The do's & don'ts of how to network effectively at holiday parties.
- How to stay active in the job market during the holiday period.

Remember: If you stay focused, while your competition is busy sipping eggnog, shopping or not paying attention, you will land that next great job in time for a genuinely Happy New Year!!
